

Huff

Have you ever been “in a huff”. Perhaps. Mortals (mortales) sometimes get into a huff. “Huff” is similar to being angry (bastante similar a enojado o enfurruñado), and it is a noun and a verb (jalear, resollar).

Some examples of “being in a huff”:

- Mr. Sanchez is “in a huff” (está enojado y malhumorado). He is not happy with a situation and he is angry.
- Mr. Podemos left the meeting in a huff (...salió la reunión enojado). This means that he left the meeting an unhappy man and in a bad mood.
- Why are you “in a huff”? = Why are you angry and in a bad mood (...esta de mal humor)?

A person can also “take the huff” (= ofenderse). Again this is a noun. Two examples:

- Mr. Corbyn, the Labour Party leader in the UK, took the huff (se ofendió...) at not being invited to Mr. Trump’s birthday party.
- Mrs. Merkel normally takes the huff when she is not invited to visit the Queen of Great Britain.

Now as a verb. A person can huff (jalear, resollar). An example:

- Mr. Putin was huffing (resollando y resoplando) and puffing after the race.

So, have you ever been “in a huff” about something? Perhaps.
